The Department of Design will create a new Design Studies in Expression minor at Radford University, designed to address the growing need for students to understand how humanistic inquiry and artistic expression can be applied to real world applications. This program provides students introductory design inquiry and language. Student will learn how to apply the design process terminology to design solutions, analyze products and processes in the design industry and learn how they are applied in both interiors and fashion. In addition, students will evaluate design expression from an historical context in both fashion and interiors.

Effective Date: Fall 2021

Reason for requesting an alternative effective date:
